A Social Media Intelligence Study

Country report for the Federal Republic of Germany

A Bakamo Public  Project for the Friedrich Ebert Stiftung

- 2019 -

Context to the German Discussion on Migration

- Germany is a founding member of and most populous state in the European Union, with 81,197,537 inhabitants in 2015.
- The country received the highest number of asylum applications during the 2015 migration crisis. Submitted applications peaked in 2016 (744,155), and decreased in 2017 (223,560).*
- In 2017, official asylum seekers in the country made up 0.39% of the population, thus Germany hosts the 4th largest group of refugees in the EU.
- Despite the vast number of refugees stationed in the country, the conversation on migration is only the 8th largest in the European Union.
- The German government consists of a grand coalition between the Christian-democratic CDU-CSU alliance and the social-democratic SPD. The alliance's stance is key to the EU's migration policy and the government lead by Angela Merkel has held a relatively pro-migrant position since the crisis' outbreak in 2015.

Humanitarian Help, Rising Security Threat and Growing Xenophobia

Germany has been the epicentre of the migration crisis since 2015. In the name of Willkommenskultur, Germany's inclusive approach to foreigners, the CDU-CSU-SPD government has decided to keep the country's borders open and has welcomed the highest number of refugees among all EU member states.

However, many blame Willkommenskultur for the escalation of the migration crisis. While some loath the rising security threat, others claim that growing xenophobia is the country's main problem.

This change in sentiment is reflected in the outcome of the 2017 federal election: as voters demanded more efficient strategies to deal with refugees already in Germany, the far-right leveraged the growing frustration with a strongly anti-immigrant campaign.

Negative sentiment is often fuelled by the lack of transparency in welcoming refugees: many people feel that uncontrolled migration means both a security threat and obscure funding spent on refugees. Reflecting on the latter, a new immigration law is often mentioned as a tool to better control migration and leverage the economic potential that lie in the successful integration of immigrants to the labour market.

"We do not need immigrants who make our life a living hell. What we need are balls to tear the mask off from the face of the lying press and the betrayers in the government."

"I can live well with 1 million refugees. But with 6 million AfD voters...?"

AfD Campaign Messages Reflect Pan-European Narratives of Migration

Although it missed the 5% threshold to enter the Bundestag in 2013, the far-right party Alternative für Deutschland (AfD) successfully leveraged the anti-migrant sentiment with an openly racist campaign and became the third largest party in the Bundestag after the 2017 federal elections.

Key Findings | DE

How and where do German people discuss migration in the social media space?

Size of Pan-European Narratives

Security is the biggest narrative: Germans often discuss crime committed or attempted by refugees. The second biggest issue is identity: while some Germans fear the loss of local traditions due to migration, others dread the growing racist sentiment in the country.

Local Issues

Although rarely discussed, the historic and contemporary presence of Turkish immigrants trigger contradictory opinions among Germans.

EU & Domestic Politics

As Germany is in the epicenter of the European migration crisis, domestic political references are more frequent than international mentions. Also, political parties' messages often influence public social media discourse.

Sentiment

While majority of the comments appear to be reserved in tone, we find that factual statements often support radical arguments.

Conversation Channels

Almost two-thirds of the conversation is taking place on Twitter, and the most engaging authors often voice radically anti-immigrant opinion.

Key Findings | DE

Highly Political Conversations Focused on Security

The most dominant topic in the German discussion is security. Apart from discussing crime-related news, people express their concern over the threat that uncontrolled migration poses to Germany.

Identity is the second-most dominant narrative in the discussion. Opinions addressing the problem of growing xenophobia and racism are equally present in the conversation as voices questioning the compatibility of migrants' customs with European values and customs.

Humanitarian arguments claim that Germans have a moral responsibility to help migrants. Others also argue that refugees do not appreciate the help and, as such, humanitarian aid should be suspended.

When it comes to economic consequences of migration, Germans sometimes engage with the zero-sum game logic. Outrage is expressed over favouring migrants over locals when it comes to social benefits, while some highlight the short-term economic benefits of welcoming migrants.

Within the demographics narrative, Germans mainly discuss their responsibility and long-term tasks in integrating migrants to the local labour market, while others postulate that migrants simply do not want to work and contribute to the local labour market.

Pan-European Narratives | DE

The shape of the migration discourse

Security is the strongest narrative: people discuss the threat that uncontrolled migration poses to locals, and demand strengthened border protection measures.

Identity is the second largest narrative, reflecting the ongoing debate over the contradictory cultural consequences of welcoming refugees.

Results:
~8,393,000

Extreme right-wing party AfD reaches 12.6% at German elections and thus receives 94 seats in the Bundestag.

(2) CDU-CSU agreement on border transit centers

“More refugees arrive again through Italy.”

Demographics (1): Contribution to Local Labour Market is Necessary but Brings Tasks for Locals

The demographic narrative is addressed by few, but in these cases it is often a vehicle for outrage.

Germany is one of the very few countries where people refer to the labour of migrants as a means to manage the rising costs of locals' pensions. However, this argument is often countered by the right-wing AfD claiming that it is actually German pensioners who must work longer to pay for the costs of the migration crisis.

Labour of foreigners in Germany raise two types of concerns. On the one hand, anti-immigrant sentiment is fuelled by the perception that migrants receive benefits without contributing to the local economy through their work. On the other hand, some people point out that Germany is in fact very attractive to workers worldwide, and the country needs a long-term strategy to integrate foreign workers in a way that will maximize this asset.

Apart from an efficient governmental strategy, tasks in labour market-integration appear at micro-level too, as some people emphasize the importance of educating immigrants to be eligible for high-skilled jobs.

ANTI-MIGRANT VOICES

Pensioners pay for migrants, and not vica versa

Pensioners should work longer to finance refugees!

Pensioners, vote for AfD in September !

Migrants are unwilling to take up jobs in Germany

From the refugee shelter directly to a house with garden?! They do not integrate, do not work, do not pay taxes and are still treated like king?! This has to stop!

Masses of unskilled workers are looking to take up jobs in Germany, while an immigration law is missing for successful labour market integration

But they are not allowed to, because an immigration law is missing, and so does the skilled workforce.

Skilled labor shortage will not be solved by refugees, but only by a regulated Immigration Law

PRO-MIGRANT VOICES

Claiming that migrants take away locals' jobs is a hypocrisy

They take away our jobs and live off our taxpayers' money, both at the same time. Schrödinger's migrants.*

It shall not be expected that immigrants will integrate in the labour market without locals' assistance

*I really hope that you also know that Japanese and Turkish "Gastarbeiter" also came from different backgrounds and education was key to their integration!

Economy (1): Why Migration Costs Are a Taboo?

Although the economic implications of migration are rarely discussed, many people channel deep frustration over the unfairness of migrant support. The zero-sum-game thinking manifests in the rising competition for social benefits, while many people demand more transparency about the costs and financial implications of hosting migrants.

There are very few voices countering these arguments. Some people cite the short-term economic benefits, while others point out that a comprehensive immigration law is required to maximize any potential financial gain over the welcoming of refugees.

Economy (2): Quotes

ANTI-MIGRANT VOICES

Zero-sum game for social benefits between locals and migrants

“Rents are exploding and families are being driven out of the inner cities. And then 900,000 refugees arrive, plus the jobseekers from other EU countries. Of course, this increases the competition for work and housing and increases fear of losing status.”

“The countries that have just overcome the worst wounds of socialism should now prefer migrants over their own people? Only the Germans can be so stupid. Migrant costs are a taboo.”

“They have not rescued refugees, but dragged social tourists to Europe.”

PRO-MIGRANT VOICES

Migrants have a positive short-term impact on the economy

“Integration: Refugees create jobs for locals and contribute to GDP already in the asylum status - An immigration law supporting integration and demographic change is required for the benefit of the local economy and society.”

Pan-European Narratives | DE

Economy (3): Top Stories

Conversation peaks reflect Germans' outrage over the financial cost of migration support: people are outraged when migrants are perceived to be prioritized over locals, and claim that the image of a tolerant and multicultural country is not worth such an enormous financial sacrifice.

Humanitarianism (1): Humanitarian Help Triggers Contradictions

The humanitarianism narrative was surprisingly small in Germany, taking up only 7.8% of the conversation.

A majority of the voices in this discourse reflect a pro-migrant sentiment and argue that helping refugees is a duty of Germany. Apart from the necessity of rescue operations and the demand to minimize deportations, these voices take a step further in pleading the case when they point out that migration (and the disadvantaged, defenceless people involved) is an easy target to blame for all Germany's problems.

However, there is a substantial amount of people who disagree, and claim that migrants are unworthy of help. These people are outraged over the stories of migrants being “dissatisfied” with what they find in Germany, and thus state that humanitarian help is in vain and must be discontinued.

Pan-European Narratives | DE

Humanitarianism (2): Quotes

ANTI-MIGRANT VOICES

Anti-humanitarian voices claim that migrants do not appreciate Europeans' help

"Who would have thought: Majority of the migrants on Aquarius boat do not want to stay in Spain."

"In the country where Holocaust denial is against the law, we are listening to the fairytale of refugees. What happened here with full force has nothing to do with people in need of protection. Quite the contrary."

"Have just seen a post by #Panorama about Syrian refugees who are dissatisfied in Germany and flee back to Turkey. What. The. Fuck?!"

PRO-MIGRANT VOICES

Rescue operations are a duty when the migration crisis is so severe

"Over 4,000 people protesting for the continuation of the sea rescue operations in the Mediterranean."

Migrants are the current scapegoats for all of Europe's problems

"Earlier it was the Jews who were responsible for all the problems, today it's the refugees - says Holocaust survivor Hanni Lévy."

Challenges of the refugee experience

"Germany needs to deport more migrants, many politicians demand. But many people forget what this actually means to the deported people"

I sat in the Hanover Administrative Court today next to a ten-year-old refugee from Syria who tearfully told how much he misses his mother. He can't make up for his mother and sisters because he has only subsidiary protected status. It's unbearable.

Humanitarianism (3): Top Stories

Peaks in the humanitarian discourse reflect a general need to help refugees who are stuck at the Mediterranean, but also highlight a strong demand for transparency in rescue operations.

Identity and Customs (1): Cultural Incompatibility VS Rising Xenophobia

The cultural consequences of immigration and its influence on local identity is the second most discussed issue in Germany.

Quoting Aristotle as “tolerance is the last virtue of a sinking society,” many Germans insist that the country should be less open and welcoming. They point to the incompatibility of Muslim and European customs, and claim that the cultural consequences of the current migrant influx can not be compared to that of previous centuries. Migrants are also accused of being reluctant to integrate, although some people refute this claim by citing personal experiences of refugees’ successful integration.

Parallel to the anti-migrant sentiment, there is a growing number of Germans who express fear over the spread of racism and xenophobia in Germany. Other pro-migrant voices claim that immigration has historically been essential to the cultural expansion of Europe, and therefore should be welcomed again.

Pan-European Narratives | DE

Identity and Customs (2): Quotes

ANTI-MIGRANT VOICES

Immigrants' culture is incompatible with that of Europe

"Incredible scenes in the once peaceful #Europe . Due to the unbridled entry of #Arabs and #Africans disguised as refugees , rooted in #Islam or archaic society! Our lives, our culture ... everything is at stake"

"It is impossible to integrate Muslims in Europe and require them to follow European cultural customs, because for this they would have to break away from the liabilities of their own religion"

Cultural influence of the current mass migration of Muslims is very different to that of past migration within Europe

"Comparing the current mass immigration of Muslims with the limited immigration of Huguenots and other European peoples in the last century is completely absurd"

PRO-MIGRANT VOICES

Fear expressed over the growing racial and xenophobic hostility in Germany

#TogetherWeCanReachMore against Racism and Hate and chevy - says Nazo Faizie!
#islamophobia #human rights #migration #migrants
#multikulti #multiculturalism #racism.*

"I want my migrant children as I like them: modest, humble, complacent, grateful WITHOUT RACISM EXPERIENCE"

Immigration has been essential to the development of European culture

"What is "our culture"? Keep in mind that Muslims have been a part of Germany for over 50 years. Also consider that Europe, including Germany, has become what it is today through immigration"

Identity and Customs (3): Quotes

ANTI-MIGRANT VOICES

Immigrants are accused of being reluctant to integrate

“Obviously it never occurred to you that the increasingly negative attitude towards refugees might just be the consequence of Muslims’ lack of willingness to integrate.”

PRO-MIGRANT VOICES

Immigrants are taking steps to integrate into German society

“In my village this is exactly the other way around. German kids of 6-12 years constantly rampage around while refugee kids are polite and doing their best in terms of integration”

Pan-European Narratives | DE

Identity and Customs (4): Top Stories

Discussing the cultural consequences of migration, many Germans express their concern over a broader shift in people's approach: they fear not the influence of Muslim culture, but the anti-migrant, xenophobe and racist sentiment that arose in Germany as the migration crisis unfolded.

Results:
~2,879,000 (34,3%)

"Leitkultur Debate: What is German? The answer should not be left only to those people who currently engage in the conversation and show no understanding of human dignity whatsoever."

"It's NOT the #Migration - but #racism and #discrimination that are the root of all problems!"

Identity

Security (1): Border Protection is Key to Minimize Security Threat

Germans are most concerned about the security implications of migration, as this issue is addressed in half of all conversations online.

The majority of people voice an anti-migrant sentiment, and many accuse the government of prioritizing migrants' integration over the security of German citizens. Crimes committed by migrants on German soil are often referred to, and many demand a strengthened border protection system. Border protection is central to the fight to enhance local security, and the topic's importance is reflected by the crisis it caused between the governing coalition parties, CDU and CSU.

There are very few people who oppose the above arguments on public social platforms. Those who do, typically point to the attacks that are committed against refugees in the country, claiming that migrants face security threats too.

Border protection is considered to be essential to minimize the security threat caused by migration in Germany, and thus the discussion between CDU and CSU on the setting up of transit centers at the German-Austrian border triggers avid engagement. Turkish immigrants

Germany has a long history of welcoming migrants from Turkey. Although relatively few people discuss the integration of Turks, it is an issue full of contradictions: while some people claim that the integration of Turkish migrants is a failure, others warn about the racism that is rising as a consequence of the anti-Turkish sentiment.

The conversation flared up after football player Mesut Özil's comments following Germany's World Cup failure. His support for Turkish president Recep Tayyip Erdoğan triggered outrage and was declared an example of how anti-democratic opinion is spreading in Europe through migration.

Does it actually catch your eyes that in Germany it is EVERYTHING about Muslims, Turkish and German-Turkish? You should examine why do Buddhists, Asian people, Indians and EU-Migrants have no "integration problems" in Germany?

Stop racism & propaganda against migrants! With your preconceptions you are pursuing collective punishment [Sippenhaft]. □ It is not fine that 700.000 German-Turkish people support Erdogan and wish for autocracy for people in Turkey. But do not forget that in Germany there still is a #fuehrer cult and the AfD is an elected party. #NoAfD

*Mesut Özil: 'I am German when we win, immigrant when we lose'

Being a migrant with Muslim background I'd like to add to the Özil case that I do not find it acceptable that Özil reproaches the Germans for racism after he took photos with the fascist Erdogan (saying "he is my president"). A democrat cannot accept that.

3.

European and Domestic Politics Context within Narratives | DE

Migration is a Central Topic of Domestic Politics

Unlike citizens of many other EU member states, Germans consider their country to be a key player in managing the migration crisis. Domestic politicians and political parties are mentioned often, which indicates that migration is a local political issue in Germany, and the solution for handling refugees became one of the most prevalent topics in the 2017 elections.

International politics are less frequently discussed in relation to migration, although events in other member states, as well as the Mediterranean were often a cause for humanitarian concern.

Conversational Tone Conceals Radical Arguments

Although the online discourse on migration takes place in a mainly conversational tone, it is worth recognizing that there is a strong divide between those who support or oppose migration. Passionate arguments are used in the debate around each narrative, but very often we see that factual statements are used to support even a radical argument.
